Several Vatican officials have been arrested and detained in Venezuela as the new government in Caracas, led by President Nicolas Maduro, moves to stamp out all opposition. The arrests, which have been called "excessive" by at least one Vatican statement, came to light after Venezuelan journalist Luis Javier Cabezas tweeted pictures of the incident. "Today there was a violent intervention of the [Vatican] Nuncio in Caracas," Maduro said during a press conference at the presidential palace. Maduro said the priest in question, a Monsignor along with 10 of his staff and about two dozen Venezuelan bishops, will be charged with "acting in the service of the United States, including drug trafficking." The Vatican said last month that it would not be granting Maduro's request for an audience with Pope Francis. The new government says it is moving to the right of former President Hugo Chavez who has died after a long illness. Opposition activists have reported the latest wave of arrests to be a reprisal against the opposition following the clashes around the senate building in Caracas last week.Q 6d1f23a050
